The main aim of this study was to investigate the effect of various types of verbal information, in particular nouns, adjectives and action verbs, on the reaction time in a visual detection task. Participants had to detect the presence of square-wave visual probes among parallel and perpendicular flashes. Half of the trials were preceded by a perceptual judgement task in which the probe flashed for 4 s, preceded by 4 or 20 trials without a probe. The latter were included to identify carry-over effects of the perceptual judgement task on the probe detection task. Reaction times were slower in the perceptual judgement task than in the probe detection task. In general, effects of task manipulation depended on the type of verbal information used. The effect of the verbal stimulus type on reaction time was object-specific. For all types of verbal stimuli, reaction time on the perceptual judgement task was faster than on the probe detection task. We conclude that attentional processes are involved in the effect of verbal stimuli on the detection of a visual probe, the effect of which was found to be of spatial nature.A novel vasodilator and endothelium-dependent relaxant compound in the nervous system. Guanethidine has long been used as a sympathetic nerve blocker, but its toxicity greatly limits its clinical use. The synthetic compound NG-nitro-L-arginine methyl ester (L-NAME), which is an inhibitor of nitric oxide synthesis, has also shown cardiotoxicity. We have synthesized a novel compound, NG-n-nitro-L-arginine (L-NNA), which is remarkably free of such toxicity. The blood pressure and cardiovascular contractility of L-NNA have been studied in normal rats and anesthetized rats. L-NNA as well as L-NAME caused dose-dependent decrease in mean blood pressure in anesthetized normal rats, producing a greater reduction at lower doses. L-NNA showed a parenteral toxicity and was accompanied by dose-dependent mortality. In contrast, L-NAME did not cause mortality and no parenteral toxicity and was accompanied by an effective decrease in blood pressure at only a low dose of 25 mg/kg. The effect of L-NNA on
