[url= breast carcinoma. Among the three major breast cancer subtypes, triple-negative breast cancer is characterized by its aggressive clinical and biological characteristics and poor outcome, whereas estrogen receptor (ER)-positive breast cancers are generally hormone receptor-positive cancers and are treated with endocrine therapy. ER-positive tumors have distinct molecular and genomic aberrations compared with triple-negative tumors. In particular, DNA copy number gains including 11q13.5 amplification and 1q21 amplification are frequent in ER-positive tumors and correlate with increased proliferation, a high histological grade, and poor outcome in ER-positive tumors. These genetic aberrations are absent or extremely rare in triple-negative tumors. The mechanisms of growth signaling activation in ER-positive tumors are based on the hyperactivity of ER signaling pathway or the ligand-dependent activation of growth factor receptor signaling pathways mediated by the heterodimerization of ER and growth factor receptors. The development of endocrine therapies targeted to ER signaling pathway or growth factor receptor signaling pathways is expected to improve the outcome of ER-positive breast cancer.
