Start your tablet or smartphone in a new way. If you are still in the market for a new device, it's time to get your hands on a new mobile device. For all consumers shopping for a new device, a smartphone or tablet is one of the most important purchases you can make. There are a number of significant considerations when selecting a new mobile device for your lifestyle. 1. Weight & Texture If you have an extremely active lifestyle, you may want to get a lighter device. Also, texture can be an important factor in your decision to get a mobile device. A device with smooth edges will be easier to hold than a device with a jagged or textured edge. 2. Display Features such as HDMI, an HDMI 2.0 port, or a microSD card slot are important, because a device with these features allows you to connect your device to a larger display such as a television. Additionally, screen size is an important factor to consider. 3. Battery Life Get the battery life you need to power a mobile device. Do you spend a lot of time outdoors? If so, you may want to get a device with a long battery life. 4. Antutu Rating The Antutu benchmark score or speed is important, because it dictates how fast your device performs. The higher the Antutu score, the faster your device performs. Devices with high performance have Antutu scores of over 100,000. 5. Memory Want to play games, watch videos, or surf the web on your device? The amount of memory is important. 6. Water Resistance Getting a mobile device with water resistance is important, because if your device gets wet, it is damaged, so you should avoid getting a device with water resistance. 7. Speakers Your mobile device should have high quality speakers. You should select a device that has high quality speakers for audio such as listening to music, watching videos, and games. 8. Storage The amount of storage on your mobile device is important. A large amount of storage can be useful for loading applications, saving files, and having a large amount of storage on your device. 9. What's New In Namexif?

Widest available EXIF data including GPS coordinates, time, ISO level, and date taken. ID numbers like the name is a bit short though. The best is that we get some EXIF info like GPS, ISO level, DATE, etc. This is nice. However, it's not auto-renaming, it's just showing what is in the EXIF info, if it's not a messed up GPS then the real file name should be displayed, and GPS for Date can be fixed. In the age of Wi-Fi, having a strong connection is not enough – when in a coffee shop, at a coffee shop in a train, when you're in the office and at home, there's always the minor chance to lose connectivity. To prevent this from happening, you can make use of an app-controlled OpenVPN server so all of your devices share the same connection. OpenVPN for Android offers some interesting features to configure and run the server. It allows users to connect their device to a server from a given pool of servers so there's only one point of failure in the connection. OpenVPN for Android does not have an app store. Hence, it will not work as advertised by default with Android devices outside Google Play. So, it might be that you have to do some hacking to get the app to work on your device. However, it's well worth the effort, as this is one of the fastest servers I've encountered on Android. Even connecting to it on a Nexus 5, the speed is well above average. I've also noticed that when there's many connected devices sharing a single connection, usage speeds are still well above average. Default server layout OpenVPN configuration files are stored in the Documents folder. OpenVPN server pool with 5 machines/servers in it. Default layout has only one machine/server, connected to it. Name: "Default" Servers: 5 Users: 1 Password: "IqtsXn31nJGPlsWfC0y10SKkJJvg" Connect to it in the WiFi settings of your Android device. Tap the "Server" icon in the lower-left menu. Tap "More." Tap "OpenVPN servers." Tap "Add." Tap "
