More particularly, the present invention relates to a portable fireproof barrier for containing fires and preventing the spreading of smoke. In emergency situations, such as a building fire or a gas leak, it is essential that a reliable barrier be present to contain the fire or the flames and to prevent smoke from spreading through a building. Even though the structure and purpose of a building can be quite different from building to building, in almost every situation, the effective containment and prevention of fire and smoke are the major safety concerns. Different methods have been used to achieve fire containment and smoke prevention. Thus far, none have proven to be entirely satisfactory. In the prior art, concrete barriers have been used to prevent the spread of fire or the entrance of smoke through a building. However, these concrete barriers were often difficult to move due to their weight and size. In addition, such concrete barriers usually required a heavy construction technique. Thus, due to their weight and size, such concrete barriers could not be easily moved from one area to another. In another prior art system, a material, such as 3da54e8ca3
