I am using following code to display svg in html in android webview. document.getElementById("item_raw").innerHTML = "data:image/svg+xml;base64, "+ secret.getData() But it is giving Unable to load resource: net::ERR_FILE_NOT_FOUND Why is that happening? I even tried using a remote resource from a local site, and also svg path tag is included in the html file itself. Documentation says that This refers to a document fragment that consists of a static base64-encoded string, used for encoding a document's static content and for encoding an entire document in XHTML format when the Content-Type of the document is text/html. , How is the static base64 encoded string being used in this case? A: Documentation says that this refers to a document fragment that consists of a static base64-encoded string, used for encoding a document's static content and for encoding an entire document in XHTML format when the Content-Type of the document is text/html. The "document fragment" it refers to is a fragment, which is a single piece of SVG data that can be read into a document. For example, you can just do this: SVG opening problem
