The following guide will give you an easy walkthrough to getting started with your first Photoshop, Photoshop Elements, or Photoshop Lightroom. 1. Download Photoshop After downloading Photoshop, make sure to open the program and activate it. You can do this by double-clicking the desktop icon. Once the program is activated you'll be given the Photoshop Creative Cloud Welcome Screen. If you already have Photoshop and want to download Elements or Lightroom instead, skip to step 6. If you do not want to use the Creative Cloud, or you have some issues with downloading Photoshop, click here to read this guide. 2. Download Photoshop Elements Download Photoshop Elements and open the program. If the program does not find an Adobe Photoshop Elements file, it will try to do it automatically. You may need to allow it by clicking "Allow access". If you only want to install Photoshop Elements to a certain disk or folder, you can do that by going to the main menu, clicking "Open", and selecting a folder. 3. Check Your Internet Connection You may also want to check your Internet connection before you start editing. 1. Go to the top left corner and click "Internet Options". 2. Then scroll down to "Connections" and click "LAN (Local Area Network)". 3. Then click the "Properties" button and under "Internet Protocol (TCP/IP)" make sure your local machine has a subnet mask and the DNS server is correct. 4. Locate and Select Your Image Go to the main menu, click on "File", and then click on "Open". It will open and show a list of files on your disk. Click on the one you want to open. 5. Click "Open" or Hit Enter on Your Keyboard. The image will open in Photoshop. If you want to open multiple files, you can click on the "open in" tab on the top right, select multiple files and then hit enter or click "open". 6. The invention relates to methods for testing software products. Routinely, tests of software are conducted that interact with software applications during the execution of the application. Routinely, to interact with the application, code that causes the application to "respond" to the test is executed. Responses from the application include responses that cause the application to perform a specific function, or a function in response to a specific input. Routinely, the code of the application includes a code for determining the location in the code of the test functions. To interact with the application, the application is run and, using this code, the test is run. To gain information concerning the location of the test functions, the code of the application is turned on and the location of the test function is determined. This can be done manually, or automatically. When the code of the application is turned on, it is important that a correct instruction is run. The "correct" instructions may be determined by checking to see if code that causes the application to respond to the test is being executed. One problem with the manually determining the location of the test function is that instructions are not run in the correct order. In other words, it is possible that the instructions which are not called first may be called after the instructions which are called first. This can lead to test failures. When the code of the application is automatically tested, the location of the test function is sometimes determined incorrectly. The test application is run and, as part of the run, a different test function is run. Because of the nature of the test application, the test program has the ability to run and change the code of the application, even though the test program is checking to see if the code of the application is being run. The test application modifies the code in the application to have the application react to the test program. This means that the application is made to test the test program instead of the actual program. In this regard, the test program is run first and, when the test program is finished, the code of the application is changed by the test application. Because of this, the location of the test function is sometimes determined incorrectly. In the case where the location of the test function is not determined correctly, the test is run and, because the application is not responding to the test as it should, the test fails. Sometimes, the test failed because the code of the application was changed by the test application. In this case, the
