BOSTON - A Team USA basketball legend said he has been served with a major bingo card of accusations that he groped a woman on a flight from Massachusetts to Las Vegas. Michael Jordan, who has long denied the charges that he kissed and groped a woman in a small bathroom at a Chicago hotel, said Wednesday he's "definitely" been served by police in the matter, according to the Boston Globe. Jordan's lawyer told the Globe that the accusation, which first arose in a lawsuit filed against the former Charlotte Hornets star, has been sent to police in Chicago where the woman lives. "I'm definitely served," Jordan said. "They told me I'm not under arrest and I'm free to go." Jordan's lawyer, Michael Watkins, told the Globe he has not talked to the woman, who accused Jordan of kissing and groping her in a bathroom at the Westin O'Hare in Chicago in 2015. Watkins told the Globe the woman had only seen an unedited version of a police report that contained accusations by a co-defendant that were not in her own statement, which was redacted because she was a minor at the time of the alleged incident. Watkins called on the woman and her attorney to release the full police report. "They are talking about a very serious incident," Watkins said. "They're having to make a choice between coming to court and defending themselves or being dragged into court and dealing with what their life has been like over these last two years." Team USA head coach Mike ca3bfb1094
