A lightweight and portable SMTP email application, this is suitable for everyone who wants to get their simple messages to go out effortlessly and easily. INTRODUCTION 1. What is TNTCP? TNTClient is a client-server network communication protocol. Client and server are two different devices talking to each other. Client's instructions are carried to server using connection and speaking sessions. In this scenario server also listens to client's input and responds to it. Server and client determine which type of session they want to use. Either client and server run as client and server respectively or server and client run on different hosts. TNT protocol can be divided into three main categories based on their usage: 1) Client-Server Network communication 2) Server-Client Network communication 3) Server to Server communication In TNT Client, we need to learn about the basic concepts of TNT Client, Network communication, and client- server communication. These are very important to understand the concept of TNT Client. At last we should try the basic programs to get more concept of the program, like, how to run the program and to run our first application. 1. TECHNICAL OVERVIEW The Struts application framework is a web application framework that allows developers to separate their application logic from their web pages. The framework is designed to make programming easier by simplifying the development and management of web applications. The framework is written in Java and is built on the new Servlet API introduced in Java Servlet 2.3. Struts is designed for Java Servlet containers that support it. Struts 2 is a complete rewrite of the Struts framework. It fully complies with all the latest specification, including the new Servlet specification, JSP specification 2.2, and new Struts 2 features such as the Struts ActionForms, Struts 2 Tags, and Struts 2 Form Beans. Struts 2 is also a product of continuous development and is being actively developed by the Struts developers. Use of this site is subject to the Terms of Use and Privacy Policy. All trademarks are properties of their respective owners.
