auhahaha why not make a fantasy rpg but you make it really hard to get to high levels so that rpg time is moot then force the kiwi to die where everyone kills the kiwi as hard as possible and then make them come back even if they dont want to for the fun of it R-6? That's about the same thing, right? It's basically the newbie one, but a bit more balanced. It's a binary, pvp-only system where due to the low level vs newbies, the newbies can only be killed/repared by higher leveled characters. And it's been okay, I guess. I guess the result of balance doesn't matter really. It's just an experiment. Doesn't the game engine handle it? I thought that if you make the newbie stay in the same area at the edge of the map for a long time, it'll automatically discard him since you don't need him in the system anymore. ETA: I thought that if a newbie would stay near the same continent/area long enough that it'd want to pick up his items from auction houses and wars, and raise his level. "GRAPHICS: The most beautiful game graphics out there. Everything from the scenery to the art direction is outstanding. Every one of the three characters are beautifully drawn and rendered. Every tree, the grass, the dead bodies, everything is beautifully painted. And like others have said, the music is right up there with the graphics, it's very emotional and soothing. The sound effects are great too, every little detail has been paid attention to throughout the game. SOUND: Music is excellent, and if you aren't paying attention you could easily get caught up listening to it rather than the dialogue. While the dialogue is good, it isn't as good as the graphics though. For that reason, I've gone ahead and decided to give this one a nine. GRAPHICS AND SOUND: Overall, I give it a ten. It's technically the best looking game out there, and this is coming from someone who absolutely loves the RE series. Easily, one of the top three games out of all the recent ones, and I'm not even the biggest fan of the RE series. With that being said, it did take awhile for the game to load up and start, but once it did everything else was flawless. There's no noticeable lag at all and everything functions at almost optimal speed. STORY and OPINION: It's one of the most emotional games I've ever played. The first bit of dialogue you hear is from the main hero who you control. A young child talks to you and it's as if you're actually right there with him; putting you in a very vulnerable and emotional state. From there it goes to the god of war, the main antagonist of the game. He speaks about the death of his wife and how it's what he wanted for so long, but his desires were not met. It's as if he's feeling that pain and remorse even though he's obviously a god and the only one responsible for that. You even get to take a look at his wife who has been killed, which was just a heartbreaking thing to see. After the main story, you get to play through each of the characters thoughts while they contemplate their past and prepare for the battle ahead. It's so, very emotional and each one of the characters thoughts adds something new. LEADERBOARDS: It's not really one that's necessary. However, it's really cool to see how you compare to bff6bb2d33

The Elden are united, their just cause has been restored, and they can finally walk freely in the Lands Between in search of treasure and glory. The darkness of the Elden Kingdom spreads into Erenland. In times of peace, even Dragons can succumb to hunger. Of course, as the leader of the Elves, Aramil is bitterly disappointed. Aramil has often plied his trade while listening to their stories about the Elves. He can only deeply lament their fate. This project is motivated by two issues; one clinical and one fundamental. Within cancer therapy, immunotherapy has emerged as the most promising strategy in recent years. For example, the use of monoclonal antibodies targeting cancer antigens (e.g., CEA, EGFR, HER2) have offered major advances in treating many solid tumors. Similarly, immunization strategies have shown promise in treating both experimental and human cancers. Unfortunately, the clinical reality has been that these approaches have not been successfully exploited to treat cancer. Within the broader context of human cancer immunotherapy, an interesting dichotomy has emerged. Cancer patients have been demonstrated to mount strong anti-tumor immune responses during active disease. Yet, a majority of cancer patients do not respond to therapy and the subset that does respond can only be transiently. This has led to an increase in the number of cancer patients studied and the number of immunological markers identified as important to the immune response (e.g., CD4+ or CD8+ T cell proliferation to a given tumor antigen). However, much less is known regarding what the underlying mechanism for the immune response is. The experimental mouse model of vaccination has provided a useful model system for addressing this issue. C57BL/6 (Thy-1/Wbb2) mice are largely refractory to immunization with tumor cells expressing foreign protein antigens, if the foreign protein is expressed poorly or is processed in a dysfunctional fashion (i.e., either weakly or aberrantly) by antigen presenting cells (APCs). However, mice vaccinated with a strongly antigenic foreign protein are able to mount an anti-tumor immune response. Interestingly, the immune response induced is dependent on CD4+ T cell help, but does not require CD8+ cells,
