Q: How can I bring my Android app to the surface? I have been creating an app which does not use the back button to go backwards. The users can click on a button which takes them to a different activity (from a different class) and if the user wants to come back, they just click the home button and it goes back where they came from. I would like to be able to return from this second activity to the activity that started the process. Does anybody know how to do this? I am new to this and I don't know if this is the way to go for apps. Thanks for your help. Edit: Thanks for your help. I just want to add that I am using an intent to take the users to the other activity and then when they want to come back, they will navigate through my program with the Back button. A: Just use OnResume() public class FirstActivity extends Activity { public void OnResume(){ super.onResume(); } ..... } Q: Add Applescript to Automator Text File from HTML file I am quite new to scripting, and I am trying to write a short Applescript to convert some of my documents from HTML to plain text files. I wrote the following script, which works, but I want to know if it is possible to write it so that it is easier to implement, as I am to create more HTML files. I want to convert the text between the tags to text and then save it as a new file. on run {input, parameters} --applescript tell application "Finder" set thePath to POSIX path of input set theFileName to name of thePath
