STORY HIGHLIGHTS Hundreds of people killed in continued unrest Yemenis oppose Saleh's plan to run for re-election next month Foreign envoys want Saleh to step down Sanaa, Yemen (CNN) -- Dozens of mortars landed in the Yemeni capital Wednesday, according to residents. The projectiles -- fired from the suburbs of Sanaa -- fell in an empty lot near a small square. Five people were reported wounded and 30 were arrested, according to a resident who spoke to CNN. The latest deaths in the restive country were reported in connection with the protests against the government of President Ali Abdullah Saleh. The reported use of mortars by pro-government forces comes as the United States says it has no evidence that they have employed heavy weapons such as tanks or jets. While none of the protesters have been identified, hundreds have been killed by security forces in their attempts to contain the demonstrations, according to Human Rights Watch. Residents say they have suffered because the security forces have employed heavy weapons. Wadah Al Baneni, an activist in the northern province of Al Jawf, said he saw the military fire mortars on his own doorstep during a protest. He said people were hit in their feet, hands, and legs. Thousands of pro-government people had surrounded his home, he said. On a different street, he said, a young protester was shot in the head and killed. "He was dead two hours later," he said. "Now they're all dead." Local activists
