Whenever a user clicks on a topic a new tab is opened and so is the new page (the child page). So far, I have not tested all the parent pages and have been getting the 404's of the parent pages whenever a user clicks on a topic in the child page. Is it normal to get 404's for the parent pages when there are nothing in the child pages? I am working on a wordpress site hosted by Thank you! A: You have to use a valid menu. valid - Menu allows navigation to the currently selected page, even when the page is not found, rather than causing the page to 404. 404 for parents with no child or children is a normal behaviour. But you can call WordPress' top page in the user have to first children and children and than themselves: In case of hierarchy collapse, it means that parent URL doesn't exist and the 404 page shows up. If not used any such wildcards in the URL.

There are two principal systems: matrix and charge control. In the matrix system, a power supply and a computer control the ejection of ink droplets onto the surface. In the charge control system, the power supply is replaced by a shock-excited firing device that ejects ink droplets on contact with the surface. In either system, the printing process is controlled and synchronized by a device called a print head. Some attempts to create new forms of inkjet printers have been based on inkjet print head designs that employ piezoelectric transducers for ejecting ink droplets. The typical design of a piezoelectric inkjet print head is a substrate made of a hard plastic. On one side of the substrate, there is a lower electrode and an upper electrode. A sheet of piezoelectric material is placed on top of the upper electrode. The lower and
