Photoshop can be run on Windows, Mac OS X, and Linux operating systems. For complete details on which platforms work with which versions, check out the site www.adobe.com/products/photoshop.html or the Apple Help system's homepage at www.apple.com/support/photoshop. Choosing which type of editing you need You need to know what your final image will look like before you start editing. No matter what type of editing you need — resizing, composition, color, image masking, or anything else — you need to decide what you want to do and what changes you want to make before you begin. * * * Preparing to edit When you get to the point of editing the picture, you need to be ready. Make sure you have a good understanding of how the file is constructed and how Photoshop works. Here are some tips for preparing to edit: Choose a time when you will be available to focus on the editing process. Think about when you can dedicate sufficient time to the editing project and be sure that you actually do that. Find out what settings work the best for you. As you edit, you should be able to change your settings easily. Having the right settings is especially helpful if your picture needs to be converted to black and white. Find an appropriate computer and start the file (or files) on it. If you start working on a photo that's stored on a flash drive, or a CD, you should be able to save the changes to the folder on the disk. If you have multiple projects going at once, decide where you want to save the files to each time, or if you can share the files with someone else while you work. Avoid using your main editing program, such as Photoshop, to edit files that are important to you. Don't load up a project on your main editing program and then go to work on it. How to reshape your subject with Photoshop You can use many Photoshop tools to change the appearance of your image. For more about the different tools, go to the Customize Adobe Photoshop CS6 online training class at www.sybex.com. Q: How to loop until autocomplete gives input as the result I am having trouble with an autocomplete function. What I want to do: When the input field has no value inside the field, I want the input to start looping in the next input field. How to achieve this: I can't figure out how to achieve this. `$(document).ready(function () { var autocomplete = $("autocomplete").autocomplete({ source: 'js/autocomplete.php', minLength: 1, }); }); fname.focus();` How can I modify this code so that it loops until the input field has an input inside? A: Autocomplete has the select option available: `$("#fname").autocomplete( { ... select: function( event, ui ) { fname.val(ui.item.label); return false; } });` That will call your `fname.val()` function, but also call the select callback, so the search completes and the label becomes available. When it becomes available, your `fname.val()` function will be called again, until it is eventually set to the value. Five Reasons Your Job Is Killing You I've been working at my current position for a few months now, and I have really observed some major changes in my body. I'm no longer as happy, as physically free as I was a few months ago when I started here. I even noticed that a few months ago, I was able to quit a cigarette without any sort of internal struggle, whereas I now go through such intense anxiety that I almost can't put my hand to my throat without feeling physically ill. My hands shake when I do, and it makes work really difficult. I do have anxiety issues, but I've never had that intense of an experience before. So, I want to explore why my job is killing my body. I've come to the conclusion that my job is making me physically ill because the environment is unnatural for me. Like any workplace, ours has its own set of demands. I've been here longer than I've been with any other employer, and I can honestly say that I've never been happier. Yet, when I look over my shoulder, I sometimes see the staff in the beginning of their day. Some are so stressed, they can barely stand. Some of them, I feel, are living out some sort of "on the edge" life, day in and day out. This constant "edge" life is making many of them mentally ill and physically unwell. I think it's time to figure out what I'm going to do. I want to make sure that I can spend the next five, 10, maybe even 20 years here. I don't know how long my current employer is going to exist, and I don't want to invest all of my life in this place. One thought on "Five Reasons Your Job Is Killing You" Greetings Stef! I'm glad your body is acknowledging that you are suffering at work.. Do you need to make a change in your life to get out of work? You seem to have something going on. I wish you peace and clarity in the upcoming changes.
