Laying a foundation Your first goal as a beginning photographer is to create a clean, professional-looking image. The process of doing so begins with the Background layer, shown in Figure 12-3. In this figure, notice that the Background layer is set to the current layer. FIGURE 12-3: The Background layer is the foundation for your final image. If you aren't an experienced Photoshop user, you may find it challenging to produce a high-quality image. For example, you may find the Background layer distracting because of the ease with which you can add or subtract pixels and distort the image.

Because of this distraction, it's usually best to leave the Background layer unaltered. You can either lock it to the other layers, create a new layer, or layer from an image and place it behind the Background layer. You can lock layers so that the changes made to them stay put. To lock layers, choose Layers⇒Lock Layers to make them unchangeable. You can't simply hide a layer; you have to lock it. ## Making Layers with Tools

Depending on the image-editing software you use, you may need to create and combine multiple layers to create an image. In Photoshop, you use tools to create new layers: * Gradient tool:

What's New in the Download Mixer Brush Tool Photoshop Cs3?

Well I do have some good news for you as I have got my hands on a skeleton from the spooky house. It's actually 3 skeletons. They have been absolutely amazing. By keeping a miniature house it's been amazing to see just how many tiny details there are, the care in the locations. It's the first time ever I've done something for an event that I've actually enjoyed doing, that I've really been proud of. Just a fantastic experience. And as the event is over, it's now time to open the box to see if I've won. My box hasn't arrived yet, so I've had to open a pre-order item instead. My box should be here any minute now. So let's hope that isn't another disheartening one. Winning a game isn't always guaranteed. I've had some great experiences with those in the past that have left me with a sense of melancholy, where I've been left with hope, but not some good news. But if I do get good news, I'll update this and let you know. I've watched my brother's box, and he's already won £5 in there. We'll see what happens. It's safe to assume that one of the main reasons I did this subscription to games is not just to make a cheap scroll, but to be able to learn from other people who have competed in competitions. Part of me worries that I'll be left with a feeling of disappointment, but if I do get anything out of it then I know it'll be worth it. There is only one small downside. What's been worrying me a little, is because there are only a few days left until the event finishes, and I don't know what state the house is going to be in. This might sound like a snob complaint. I'm sure most people would realise a house is going to be in a rough state if it's been left for so long. But the point is, it feels like this might be a step back in the competition. By saying this, I hope it doesn't sound like I'm judging anyone, I genuinely think
