Artistic and design professionals typically use Photoshop to manipulate photos that they present to the public. Photoshop's biggest weakness is the lack of true cropping and resizing. Photoshop can't do either of those functions well, although it can create images that are cropped and resized with the Magic Wand tool. You can crop with the rectangle tool if you have a fairly accurate rectangle or free-form selection and use the rectangle or the Lasso tool to select free-form areas. To resize images and typeset text, you have to use the Type tool and alter the settings in the Character panel to increase or decrease the size of a typeface. ## Paintshop Pro Paintshop Pro is another popular design and image manipulation program, with some features similar to Photoshop and some different. It can create very high-quality images and has all the standard tools found in Photoshop. You can crop, resize, and manipulate an image in one tool, while painting options enable you to fill areas of your image with colors or gradients. You can even layer and then group items within the layer, so that items can be moved or resized or even be duplicated.

Technological advances in the management of myocardial ischemia. Incorporating technological advances into medical practice has been most prevalent in cardiology during the last three decades. Catheterization laboratories are now capable of performing procedures that were once unavailable. Catheter-based therapeutic options that are currently being evaluated include direct angioplasty, rotational atherectomy, stent implantation, coronary artery bypass surgery, and the endocardial injection of pharmacologic agents. Revascularization procedures can be done in a staged fashion, including a percutaneous coronary artery bypass graft in the setting of myocardial infarction. Catheter-based therapies have been well received by the cardiology community and have been shown to significantly reduce the risk of repeat revascularization and improve left ventricular function in selected patients.

Rebecca "Scottish woman who's totally not a magpie" Posted on August 19, 2014 Today's post is a special tribute to the amazing Rebecca from the UK who was the originator of this month's Jellicle poll, where I ask you a simple question in order to find out who you are. You could be anyone from anywhere, so feel free to answer that question. It doesn't matter if you've been affected by Botox or have grown to embrace the daily dose of depilatory creams, just keep it to yourself, and if there's a middle name and you'd like to share that too, by all means please do. As for Rebecca, she's a beauty addict who lives for the day when she can reach into her cupboard and pull out the perfect shade for her red hair. She's recently signed up for the monthly GA monthly extra subscription box, which of course meant that she would need a name. So what can we say about our Rebecca? 1. What's your favorite natural deodorant? I've never liked the ones that are too perfumed. I prefer natural deodorants that have a nice scent but don't linger on you. If you find yourself stinking in the morning I'd recommend Essential Oils deodorants. 2. When was the last time you had a full body wax? I'm pretty sure I did it a long time ago. I remember being really excited about it and I even got it done as a present for a
