The media logger permits you to show the time spent on the production of a file. The media logger allows you to view the time spent on the production of a file. The media logger logs the user actions and automatically saves all information and time in the system, both the actions of the user and the time spent. The size of the logs may vary depending on the user activities. Best Features: The user can identify: the name of the file being edited; the name and surname of the user who performed the action; the date and time of the action. The user will be able to save the actions taken into the database All projects, including sub-projects, will be displayed; the user can view all the actions performed on all projects. Manage, if necessary, projects using the navigation menu. You can log, in the project, the time spent on the production of a file. This application doesn't have any component that requires additional software to run it.Q: How to add parameters and delete existing ones with wp_insert_post() I would like to have the ability to add a parameter to the URL that the site is at and then pass that parameter to the new post being created. I currently am using if(isset($_GET['remove'])){ delete_post_meta($post->ID, '_trackqip'); wp_update_post(array('ID' => $post->ID, 'post_status' => 'publish')); } but I would like to know how to add that parameter, then get the new post ID, then delete that parameter from the URL on the page after it's created. A: You can pass parameters with wp_insert_post. wp_insert_post(array('post_title' => 'Your title', 'post_type' => 'post', 'post_status' => ' '
