A brutal war between humanity and alien forces has erupted, leaving entire cities scorched in flame. Only a small fraction of the population escaped. The "safe zone" is devoid of human inhabitants. It was developed to be an oasis. Residents of the zone are still struggling to rebuild their society after the war. Now they live in a peaceful society with low levels of violence and drug abuse. The society also mixes the city with the wilderness. People move back and forth between the city and the wild with their vehicles. The machine is governed by a central nervous system, which is based on neurobiology, artificial intelligence (A.I.), and genetic engineering. The state promotes a future in which each person reaches his true potential by harmonizing with the central nervous system. Each person has a unique brain pattern, which is called a chip. Shakespeare in Theaters project from Amazon Studios has become a hit on the internet.

More Furry Plays Available. Our furry plays have been popular on and off for many years. But, we are certainly emerging as the production company that truly shows Shakespeare as it should be seen in a theatrical setting in a furry style.. That's right--there is a large section of our site dedicated to Shakespeare's plays in furry play.

We will provide the source material for the projects to consume. If you are interested in trying a Shakespeare in the Fur blog, then we will provide the source material available on the website with you.

We will assist you when it comes to providing the commentary! Due to the large amount of material with lots of time spent on it, we cannot provide source material and guidance for everyone who wants that to happen. We can provide the links, help you navigate where to find the material, and even provide it for you if you don't have it on your own. We can even arrange for other people to provide that as well.

This Series Homepage Provides a Biography for The First Hundred People to Follow. Furry Shakespeare is the company. But, we want to preserve the original stories and style. We will provide a biography of the individuals and companies who were the big fish in the water. We realize that there is enough information that already exists. So, our goal is to provide the neatest biography possible--if not complete. We need to tell those stories. So, what better way than to provide you with some extra sources and insight?

Homepage: Steam page: Twitter: Facebook: Stellona story outline: IndieDB page: Music Friday: Sly and the Family Stone A few weeks ago, we asked for a reader to send in suggestions of music from the 1960s. We haven't posted any of these yet, but we received quite a few. Almost all of these were cool, and many were good choices – but none was actually what we were looking for. Instead of a single request, we decided to try a little experiment – have a few people send in a song, and then we will randomly pick one or two from those submissions to share. This is the best song that we received, and we already knew it was going to be on this Friday's list. At the start of the 20th century, Billie Holliday began singing and recording songs that made her the first great jazz-soul vocalist of the postwar era. She not only sang songs by other people, she wrote several of her own and was honored by being asked to perform at the first session of the legendary Newport Jazz Festival, with her then-husband Sonny Rollins and several other New Orleans musicians that year. Holliday had started out as a singer with her brothers in a church choir, and then after graduating from high school, she left to work in a factory. A church gave her a scholarship, where she was mentored by the great Omer Simeon, a teacher of the renowned gospel singer Mahalia Jackson. She earned her bachelor's degree at Howard University in Washington, DC, and her master's degree in music at New York's famed Juilliard. In 1938, she married jazz trumpeter Lionel "Sly" Moore, and together they eventually formed their own band. It was this band that discovered Dizzy Gillespie, who was still in college in that summer of 1945 when the band found itself in the Billie Holliday musical. Gillespie, who made his career by playing "cool" jazz, had never heard the traditional jazz of New Orleans, so he soon changed his style. Holliday would later leave her husband, which resulted in a huge scandal and a trial. After her divorce, she told a journalist that the man who ran her off was black, and later said she was told to say that by a black man. She returned to Dizzy, and they became good friends

Shadows. An old well with a rope ladder near the center of the camp provided access to a landing. Beside the well was a cairn of dust blown by the breeze. I followed the top of the cairn to some more Whispered Shadows behind a small hut. The Whispered Shadows talked among themselves for a bit, but I couldn't understand a word of their origin language. The one nearest the well seemed to know a bit of Common, though. I was able to make out the word for Kam'nan. I didn't understand, but at least it was one that I recognized. They seemed to be debating whether to share their knowledge with me or not. The one nearest the well concluded their discussion by using an unknown word on the other two that I gathered was my word for Kam'nan. Recognition lit on their features, and they nodded their approval and started speaking with the Old One. The remainder of the Whispered Shadows crowded around, eager to learn the secrets of Kam'nan. The one nearest the well watched the Old One for a moment before approaching him and pointing at me. He smiled and grunted, and I could comprehend this to be a nod. I noticed he had a staff in his hands and placed it reverently on the ground before me. Another figure approached, and I recognized the new one as the Old One. He gently drew a finger across the staff resting before him, shooing the other Whispered Shadows away. His voice sounded as difficult to understand as their language. The Whispered Shadows dispersed, but he pointed at me. He smiled, and I understood this to be a smile, then made a humming sound in his mouth. I knew this as a greeting. As I stared at him, he gave a few last words of instruction to the clubfooted one, gesturing to him in what looked like a charge. The clubfooted one did as
