1.Dashboards of record companies like Universal or even Warner Music are often inflexible and cluttered. Think back to the time when you had to manually open up your iTunes to link the Music app with whatever artist you're listening to. Thankfully, that old-school syncing technology is making a comeback. Universal's own music-player app has been redesigned with a one-click feature. All you have to do is hit a star and the music app will now instantly play the song you want to listen to. It's a really clean interface, but it is admittedly just a step in the right direction. According to the release, "The redesign reflects the Universal Music Group's focus on more high-quality content and better workflows for artists as the music industry continues to evolve." One day, Universal plans to release a video-player app, too, but for now you can just go through the Spotify app.Q: How to return in Angularjs a partial view in the model I'm coding in Asp MVC 4 and Angularjs I'm want to know how I can return the partial view in the model. this is my controller: var App = angular.module("App", []); App.controller("UserCtrl", function ($scope, userService) { $scope.lista = []; $scope.listar = function () { $scope.lista = []; $http({ url: '/Users/Listar', method: 'GET' }).then(function (response) { console.log(response.data);
