I'm looking for ideas on what I can use for my 2 yr old to play with. Right now, he is only interested in draw and color and doesn't really play with the other kids and my husband doesn't really want to sit and play with him for an hour while he colors so I'm looking for things to do with him when he wants a little bit of attention. I'm finding that the kids he plays with aren't interested in coloring either. My 2 year old used to have a couple of activity centers which I sold when I started babysitting so I don't have that. Our favorite creative play activities are craft kits. We actually used to use crafting kits but over the past couple of years we have been buying new craft kits/crafting equipment as it gets cheaper and cheaper and we no longer have a teenager to ruin it all. However, I like the idea of kits that are really kid-centered and that can actually teach you and your kid some skills. One I like is the Glitter Glue kit which is what we bought yesterday. It contains paint brushes, thumbtacks, and eye-catching stickers which you can easily apply to tissue paper. Speaking of tissue paper, the one I have used the most recently is the Red Silly Bean Apricot Tissue Paper. It is great for use with cut and pasting activities and can also be used for acting like a roll of toilet paper. We had a bit of a laugh when I was first showing this to the kids. They asked if
