Bad Piggies is not just a simple game but a game with a lot of depth which is generally ignored by mainstream media. This facility is designed to evaluate the function of rat L1210 leukemia cells transplanted into rats. The number of living and dead cells is measured as well as the mode of death (apoptosis, necrosis, or autophagy). The number of leukemic cells and the proportion of viable cells is measured as a function of time after transplantation. The mode of death is also measured. The amount of tumor necrosis factor alpha and interferon gamma, the amount of granulocyte macrophage colony-stimulating factor and macrophage colony-stimulating factor, and the expression of costimulatory and adhesion molecules are also measured in the recipient's lymph nodes and spleen. Preliminary studies are being conducted on the effect of treatment of rats with the ML-20B macrophage and NK cell inhibitor, anti-asialo-GM1 antibody, on leukemic cell growth. In addition, the effect of anti-TCR antibodies on the growth of leukemic cells in rats is under investigation. Electropolymerized "turn-on" sensing of peptide self-assembly using electroactive dendritic polymeric materials. The electrochemical detection of sensitively engineered supramolecular systems with nanostructures has long been sought after. Although the principles of sensing have been described, few strategies are available for their implementation. A new sensing strategy, "turn-on" detection using electroactive dendritic polymers, has been developed. The sensing features are: (1) electrochemical detection of peptide self-assembly using electroactive dendritic polymeric materials (1), (2) fast and efficient molecular recognition of peptides through electroactive dendritic polymeric recognition units (2) and (3) improved sensing sensitivity and selectivity by the incorporation of electroactive dendritic polymeric materials (3). The application of the sensing strategy was demonstrated in sensing the solution-phase self-assembly of histidine-rich peptides. The electroactive dendritic polymeric materials are proven to be excellent tools for sensing peptide self-assembly based on their capability of (1) good electrochemical response from complexes through electron and energy
