time, though, it's best to stick with stereo. If you specify stereo, just output the left and right channels: Only the left (L) and right (R) channels should be output. Speaker Output Is there any way to get the three speakers on my computer to mix stereo audio into a 5.1 system? Yes. It's probably easiest to stick with some kind of hardware surround sound card. In some applications, though, you can control the built-in speakers. When you play a file with Lame, for example, you can choose the volume of each speaker: But you can't choose the left/right and center speaker volume. You might be able to control the volume of each speaker in some audio players, like Winamp, for example: What is the difference between these types of audio mixing?
A: Monitoring For example, if you're doing a test
