This is often the case when dealing with the government. ROBERT SIEGEL, HOST: Let's bring in David French now. He is a contributing writer for The National Review and the author of "Battle for America: The Fight to Save and Build a New Middle Class." David, what's behind this news about the Obama administration going to stop considering a religious-matter case against four nuns who put their religion above the law? DAVID FRENCH: Well, the president had been asked about this in a recent interview with a Catholic publication, and he was candid about the fact that we have a dramatic gap in our body of law. The First Amendment says that no religion shall be compelled to produce c6a93da74d
