Alcatech.BPM.Studio.Profes sional.v4.9.1-H2O.rar

both flavours are based on the same code base. in fact, the 'professional' versions adds a few features including: undo/redo support and a session log a dynamic schedule view quota support in the form of user, daily, and session quotas support for.rvx sessions and project templates support for.rvx session recordings support for.mp4

session recordings support for plugins the undo/redo function is implemented using qt's native support for undo/redo, in combination with qt's native qapplication specific api. the undo/redo operations are directly accessible via the qapplication. undo/redo is very similar to the native undo/redo functions in other applications (e.g. msoffice, google chrome). the session log is a simple table where the user can keep track of all sessions. this supports undo/redo. for instance, the user can go back to previous sessions, or can re-record previous sessions if something went wrong. the session log can be used to see how long a user has used the application (i.e. session duration). qt has native support for managing quotas. this means that the sympla 'professional' versions supports user, daily, and session quotas. for instance, the user can be limited to a certain number of sessions. sympla professional versions provides a setting which allows the user to control the number of daily sessions which are allowed. this allows the user to control how much time the user spends on day1, day2, day3, etc. rvx (recording video exchange) is a video file format based on the.mp4

file format used to store video in mobile devices. this means that symplo's 'professional' version supports rvx files and the project templates used for rvx sessions. symplo's 'professional' version also supports recording rvx sessions.
