Kenwood KRF-V9993D (receivers).The rising world population will demand substantial food production to feed the demands of all these people. This increase in food demand, however, will not occur without a corresponding increase in the agricultural acreage devoted to food production. Another requirement of the increase in world food production is the need to minimize the loss of nutrients from grain into the ecosystem, particularly through runoff. The present invention addresses these needs by providing a proper degree of wetting of the soil during growth of the crop, and allowing for minimal nutrient loss when the crops are harvested. According to the present invention, the moisture and nutrient needs of a crop are met without requiring irrigation. This means less water is lost to the environment and less water is used to grow the crop. Instead, the crop is allowed to grow where it is naturally found, and the crop is only wetted by rainfall that naturally occurs. Alternatively, the crop can be allowed to grow during the growing season where rainfall occurs at times that are convenient to the farmer and/or in a location where crop growth is most in demand, such as in a well-irrigated area. One object of the present invention is to provide a method of growing a crop in which water is applied to the soil to keep the soil at a water capacity that is suitable for growing the crop. A second object of the present invention is to provide a method of growing a crop in which the availability of nutrients to the crop is increased. A third object of the present invention is to provide a method of growing a crop in which the inherent loss of nutrients from the soil is prevented by avoiding excess moisture and allowing the soil to drain. A fourth object of the present invention is to provide a method of growing a crop in which the growth of the crop is restricted to the time during the growing season that is most advantageous for the crop.]. However, our data showed that neither TNFi-treated patients nor MPA-treated patients were different in terms of the presence of OX40L expression or the expression of OX40L on intratumoral lymphocytes from inflamed synovium compared to RA patients with OA. Moreover, we also observed significant differences of OX40L expression on intratumoral lymphocytes from synovium in each TNFi-treated patient compared to MPA-treated patient as well as compared to the group of RA patients with OA.
