The technology can be seen as an enhancement to image processing techniques or in some instances can be thought of as a replacement for some graphics processing units (GPU). This technology was created by the University of Maryland Center for Advanced Computer Graphics (CACG) and is publicly available as an open source project. Problem Statement The existing image processing pipeline will fail if the user is photographing moving objects while panning the camera. A typical example is the case where a bird is flying towards the camera. This high rate of motion cannot be processed by existing cameras or the current cameras used to record applications. As a result, either the image is not captured or there is a delay in the image processing. This delay will cause a non-
