You can perform many machine learning functions with Photoshop CC. You can do general searches to find people, places and objects in images using a new search engine. Thus, you can create a "bird" pattern and search for all your birds by typing "bird". Also, you can do a targeted search, which will allow you search for and find a specific object, like your brother or your cat. Those searches are powered by the machine learning capabilities of the software. Photoshop CC is a major update to Adobe's photo editing program, since it's billed as a cloud-based program; meaning that it works in a browser. The first half of the year brought many new features to the program itself. Here are some of the features Photoshop CC brings to the table: One of the most valuable features in Photoshop CC is the new ability to differentiate between a copy and a crop tool. Previously, a crop tool and a move tool were colored the same which meant that when you adjusted the size of an object on a piece of paper, Photoshop would also alter the size of that crop tool. While this alone would be an issue for many artists, but this feature can also be used for cross editing; where you can use the paint tool to paint on areas that were originally selected with a crop tool. The final product appears just how you would expect. You can resize a crop tool by selecting it and moving it. To resize a move tool, select it, then move your mouse to the right or left to move the crop tool. An interesting feature that has not been available in Photoshop until now is the ability to use the Crop feature to define areas for a lens blur. Now you can give yourself a special lens blur to create interesting effects. You can also use a gradient mesh layer to do a lens blur using one of the combos available. With a support of over five million Photoshop users, most of whom have used Photoshop for over 10 years, Adobe Photoshop gave a lot of consistency to the user interface. Of course, being a pixel-pushing pro, we all knew this was coming since we were proudly using Photoshop since version 9.
