We've run a series of articles on April Fools jokes dating back to 2000, and there are a lot of great jokes from all of those years still available. All of the jokes on this list are available here. According to my colleague Ram, who's been watching things more closely than I have, he claims that the ultimate fate of Julian Assange and his Wikileaks collective will be determined by the US election. Although it's not one that's just gone down, it's about to become the most important date in modern US political history. So let's look at the facts and figures that stand to shape the world's political landscape on this date. First of all, there's the really big one: the presidential election. We saw how Donald Trump's ideas and words were catapulted into the mainstream by the mainstream media. If Hillary Clinton is elected US President, that trend will continue: the fact that she's made more sensational or controversial remarks, or had more controversial actions, than her opponent won't suddenly vanish, and will continue to affect the news cycle. In particular, and most cynically, is the reporting of Clinton's actions on Wikileaks, which has been pretty consistent: if she's taking emails out of Wikileaks, that's a bad thing, and if the emails are from someone else, that's a bad thing. Secondly, there's the official justice system. There are three cases going on in the US – Julian Assange in London, Bradley Manning in Virginia, and Paul Manafort in the US. We know that the Department of Justice, the FBI, and the Secret Service are investigating those cases, and we know that they're all looking at the same things: the communication between Assange and Manning, and the communications between Manning and Wikileaks.
