They always finish in first or second place in the AL East and rarely, if ever, miss the playoffs. While teams with this type of success do exist, one must also consider the impact of the parity in today's baseball world. This year the Philadelphia Phillies are off to a great start, currently in second place in the NL East. Last year the Yankees found themselves in second place in the AL East heading into August. A team that we were so certain of being able to win the World Series just 12 months ago is now, in the opinion of many, sitting in second place in their division. The question now is, what will the impact of this year's divisional standings have on the postseason totals. Let's take a look at some possible scenarios: Toronto Blue Jays: The Jays have been playing some good ball lately with six consecutive wins in a row. They are currently in third place in the AL East but the odds are stacked against them to make the playoffs. They are now in a tough situation,
